Sudden Demise—Death of a Woman from Exhaustion and Intoxication.—Coroner Carey was yesterday called upon to hold an inquest upon the body of a woman named Joanna Sullivan, who died very suddenly last Sunday morning. The body was somewhat bruised, particularly at the lower extremity, and the evidence showed that her husband had been in the habit of beating her. Testimony was also elicited to the effect that she had been continually intoxicated for some time past, and Dr. J. B. Smith gave his opinion that death was produced by the destruction of the mucous membrane of SUDDEN DEMISE-DEATH OF A WOMAN PROP the destruction of the mucous membrane of the stomach, caused by the excessive use of alcholic stimulants.

The deceased resided with her husband at the corosed resided with her husband at the corner of Second and Race-streets, and, at the time of her death, was in a condition soon to become a mother. The jury, after a careful investigation of the circumstances, rendered a verdict of death from habitual intoxication.

Melancholy Suicide — A Well-known Citizen Throws Himself into the River and in Drowned. — One of those melancholy suicides, sad only from the suffering that leads to them and the pain they cause surviving friends, took place yesterday morning. A well-known brick-layer, about thirty years of age, named Charles Young, who resided with a wife and three children on Ninth-street, between Cutter and Linn in comments with between Cutter and Linn, in company with a brother-in-law named Cleaveland, started from home with the intention of crossing the river to Covington.

A few moments after the boat left the landing, while the attention of Cleaveland was directed from his friend, Young rushed rapidly toward the stern of the steamer, and before he could be prevented, threw himself over the railing into the river. The body sank, and thosewho witnessed the occurrence saw it no more.

sank, and those who witnessed the occurrence saw it no more.

The immediate cause of the act is unknown. The deceased was very generous in his nature, and was partially a victim to an ungovernable appetite for intoxicating drinks. He has been for some time past predisposed to self-destruction, which caused his friends much pain and apprehension; but his real distaste for life seemed to lie far deeper in his nature than they knew or could fathom. The vocuum created by his untimely demise may be filled, but the hateful fact that led to it has been buried with him. Those who knew him beat will weep over his loss, although they can not sympathize with the grief which his soul shut up within itself and carried to the realms of the Unknown.

BUSINESS MES'S PRAYER MEETING .- After

Business Man's Prayes Mesting.—After the opening exercises were concluded, a brother arose and saked prayers for a friend, who desired the intercession of the meeting for strength to overcomes vice which had obtained such a hold upon him that it was impossible for him, unsupported, to shake it off. He had a longing taste for ardent spirits, and in spite of his resolution he frequently found himself drinking a glass of ale.

In accordance with this request, fervent prayers were made in his behalf, and one brother asked that if he could not resist the temptation to take an occasional glass, he might at least have strength bestowed upon him from on High to take it home before drinking, that his shame might not be made public. He likewise offered up a petition in behalf of the persecuted fions of israel, asking that eighteen centuries of exile might be considered an expiation for their great offense, when they called for the crucifixion of Christ, and demanded that his blood might be upon themselves and their children.

A gentleman in the congregation, in referring to the case of the intemperate man, said that thousands of church members were guilty of equally bad practices daily, of which they were, in duty, bound to divest themselves. He mentioned the habit of chewing and smoking as among them. We should do nothing that Christ did not do, and no one supposed for a moment that he ever walked about with a cigar in his mouth.

Another brother thought that the meeting was taking the wrong turn. On Saturday those present prayed for blessings upon the labors of the following (the Sabbath) day. Let us ask, now that they had been concluded, that the seed sown spring forth and prosper. That was the appropriate sphere for a Monday morning's prayer meeting. He accordingly asked the Divine blessing, and his sentiments were doubtless concurred in by the whole audience. Prayers were afterward offered up for such erring ones as desired the intercession of the servants of God present, when the clock announced the time for adjour passage between him and Lady Hester Stanhope is given:

Stanhope is given:

When thus arrived at Sidon, Wolff said to Colonel Cradock, "I have a letter with me for Miss Williams, who resides with Lady Hester Stanhope. So the letter was sent to Mar-Elias, Lady Hester Stanhope's residence, and an Arab servant conveyed it. But instead of a letter from Miss Williams, one came for Wolff from Lady Hester herself, which ran as follows:

"Your most humble and obedient servant, "JOSEPH WOLFF."

Wolff sent this answer by the same servant as before. On Lady Hester receiving it, she perused it, and desired the man to wait, that she might give him a present. She then came out with a whip, kicked the poor fellow behind, and sent him away. He came buck lame to Wolff, and told him that the daughter of the King of England had beaten him. Wolff, in order to satisfy him, gave him a dollar, for which he dares say the man would have gladly undergone another beating at the same price from the daughter of the King of England.

Sedimous Placable in Ineland.—The following placard was lately posted through different parts of Longford: "Brishmen do not intend to be put down or bullied over by the placards of English cut-throat Saxons for we will join the Pope's army, despite all their infornal dodgings! The Recent Terrible Collision at Sea-The Sinking of the United States Steamer Walker-Twenty Lives Leate.

The telegraph has already mentioned the fact of the sinking of the steamer Walker, in the vicinity of Cape May, on the morning of Thursday, the 21st inst, and from our Eastern mails we gather full and interesting particulars. At half-past two o'clock on that morning the United States coast-survey steamer Walker, under command of Lieut, J. J. Guthrie, of the United States Navy, was run into by a coasting schooner, and damaged so much that she went down in half an hour afterward, and twenty of the crew are supposed to have been lost.

STATEMENT OF A SURVIVOR.

The United States coast-survey steamer Walker left Norfolk on Tuesday, the 19th inst., bound for New York. The whole number of souls on board consisted of sixty-nine, including one lady, the wife of J. A. Seawell, the first officer. Everything went on prosperously till the morning of the 21st, Thursday, about two o'clock, when in sight of Absecom Light-house (the light bearing N. W., ½ N.,) the light from an unknown schooner was seen one point on the starboard bow. The wind was N. N. E., ½ E., making about five and a half knots. As the schooner neared the steamer the light became ahead, and finally on the port bow. Then the helm of the Walker was put to "port," bringing the schooner; light nearly abeam. Suddenly the schooner jibbed over from the starboard to the "port" tack, and came down under all sail square abeam of the Walker, knocking a plate off the bow below the water line, which caused her to fill so rapidly that she sunk in thirty minutes after the collision. The wind was blowing a double-resfed topsail breeze at the time, with a heavy sea running. The schooner passed on her course immediately afterward, and the gale was so strong that it was impossible to open any communication with her.

The first officer of the Walker, Mr. Seawell, was on deck, in command of the watch, about her.

The first officer of the Walker, Mr. Seawell, was on deck, in command of the watch, about twenty men, when the two vessels came together. The remainder of the crew, and getter. The remainder of the crew, and Mrs. Scawell, were below, sleeping in their berths.

As soon as the vessels struck, Mr. Scawell called up Lieutenant Guthrie and the crew, who took their places on deck in the best order, the strictest discipline being maintained. While this was going on, the schooner struck the steamer three times—the first time striking the former of the stricters. first time striking her forward of the guards, staving in the port waist boat. The second time she struck the paddle-box and wheel; and the last time she struck the bulwarks and the last time she struck the bulwarks about the port-quarter and stern, demolishing the port-quarter boat. This left the Walker with only two boats for the officers and crew to make their escape from the wreck.

The bilge-pumps, worked by the engine, and the deek-pumps were put in operation, but they failed to free her, and she filled rapidly at the bows. The two remaining boats were then got out, and Mrs. Seawell, the sick, and those most helpless, were passed into them in regular order, without confusion. There was no regular system of passing them on board the boats, but each stepped in as fast as his turn came, without pushing or crowding. When as many had got into the boats as it was supposed they could safely carry, they shoved off, leaving between twenty and thirty persons upon the wreck.

A PERILOUS POSITION AND REMARKABLE

to the surface with his head and shoulders above water, but still held to the wreck by the rope.

When the vessel went down, part of the cabin on deck burst off by the force of the wind rushing out of the vessel, and floated near the place where she went down. Upon this were three or four men, who happened to be near enough to Mr. Seawell when he came to the surface to be able to assist him. The men kept his head above the water by seizing him under the arms. They tried to release him by one diving down with a knife in his hand to cut the ropes, while the others would hold him by the leg. As the sea was breaking over them all very roughly, this attempt was tried several times, but without success, when, with a desperate effort, Mr. Seawell raised the leg which was free, and placed his knee upon the piece of the cabin.

The rope by which he was held stretched to its utmost length, and, waiting a favorable moment during the pitching of the raft from the heavy sea, one of the men dexterously cut the rope with a knife, which freed the unfortunate man from his dangerous position.

Garibatdle Sicilian Sampsons.

Garibatdl's Sicilian Sampsons.

A characteristic incident occurred at one of the steepest rocky eminences which Garibaldi wished to occupy, to obtain a command of position above Palermo. He had a piece of mountain srtillery, but no means to raise it. While he was at a stand, at the base of the rough and almost perpendicular hight, two contadini(countryman) came up, and inquired what was the cause of the delay. They were brothers, and possessed the characteristic spirit of the Sicilians, with even a superior degree of the strength, activity, and power of degree of the strength, activity, and power of endurance of the islanders generally. After a short consultation between themselves, one of them bent his manly frame down over the a short consultation between themselves, one of them bent his manly frame down over the gun, and embracing it, as one friend does another, with an effort which might be compared with that of Sampson, raised it to his broad shoulders, and with a slow, but firm step, commenced his way up the rocky path. His brother performed the same operation with the carriage of the gun, and both proceeded silently, but resolutely, up the rocks which were so rough and so steep that few men, except Sicilian mountaineers, would willingly attempt to ascend alone.

The bystanders expressed their joy and surprise; but Garibaldi stood gazing at the noble patriots as if astonished, and when he recovered himself, he exclaimed:

"I knew the Sicilians were always brave and devoted to liberty; but, if I had known that I should find such men as these, I would have come alone!"
